Writing Across the Curriculum K-16
~ 2008’09 Workshop Series ~

New and experienced K-16 teachers will engage in a collaborative approach to viewing the world through different lenses through writing in a variety of content areas across the curriculum: science, social studies, math, literature, and art. The theory and practice of ‘Writing to Learn’ approaches will be examined through demonstrations, reading and discussion of current research, and writing and sharing in discipline-focused and grade-level groups. Throughout this program participants will:

- discover ways in which to integrate writing into rigorous content curriculum;
- examine differentiated instruction and apply practical strategies to improve the writing skills of all students, including English language learners;
- engage in methods to promote active student engagement, academic talk, and the understanding and retention of content material;
- identify standards and learning objectives to achieve grade-level expectations;
- investigate and analyze assessment using multiple measures in order to understand the strengths and needs of their students;
- read and discuss current research on the teaching of writing and its relationship to reading in content area literacy development.
